Celebrating Differences

I understand that cultural differences sometimes cause conflict and are aware of my own culture

We created our own culture wheels to identify what part of our culture we share with others and how we are different. We then looked at how sometimes people have conflicts with people from other cultures because they are unfamiliar to them and appear to be different. That can make some people feel uncomfortable. However, rather than allowing that to create a conflict, the person could ask a question and use the difference in culture as a learning experience, which will bring people closer together. We practised turning a conflict into a learning moment via scenarios.

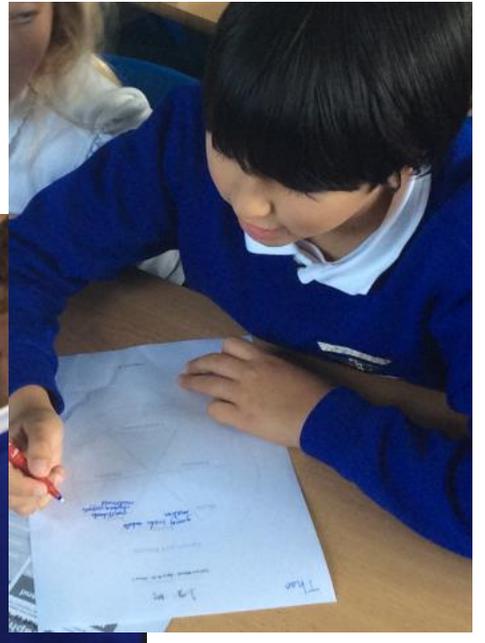

My Cornish culture is like a lot of others in my class as we have access to similar foods, clothes and music.

We all have a culture no matter where we are from.

My culture is my own, it is influenced by family and where they come from.

I know what racism is and strategies to prevent it.

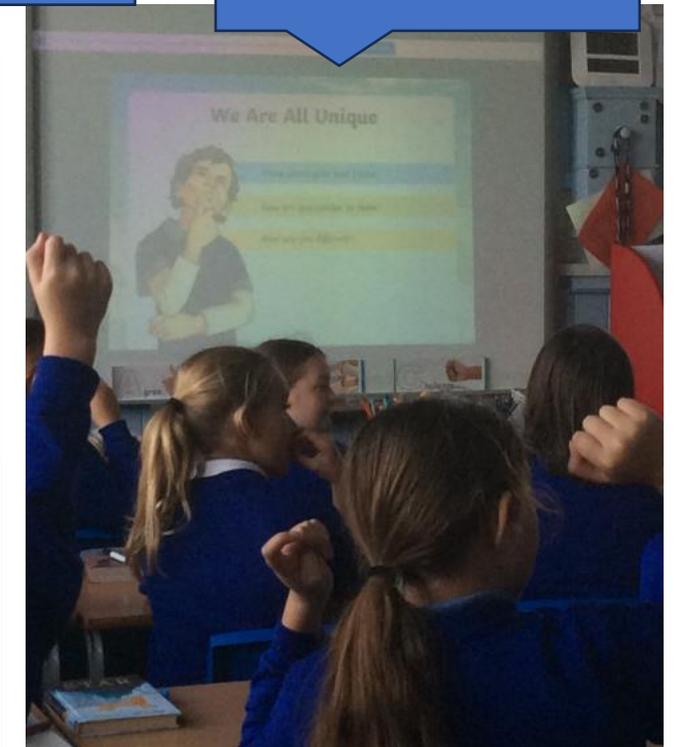

We discussed the term racism and what it means. We talked about how we are all unique and all have human rights.

We need to be aware of our own prejudices, you cannot judge a book by its cover!

The opposite to equality is discrimination.

We all have our own identity.

I know that rumour and name-calling can be bullying behaviours and can come up with strategies to prevent this behaviour.

We looked at some of the protected characteristics and how they could have been discriminated against. We discussed what is bullying behaviour and how we can support each other to prevent such behaviour.

If we follow our school values, then we can all be included.

Bullying can be direct and indirect. Both are not acceptable!

We are all human beings and deserve to be treated kindly.

I can respect my own and other peoples' cultures

We looked at two children from different family backgrounds in the same country and discussed what their culture was like and how it compares to each others and our own. We then thought about what these children would experience if they moved to our school.

Even though these boys both come from the same country – Ghana – they have very different cultures.

I do have some similarities to people from other cultures.
